Excerpt: . . . such a rate, as gives the Dane; but little Prospect of Benefit by a Change; and, besides, there is such a fixed Hatred between these two Nations, by reason of the injuries they have so often given and received, that it is thought impossible that the Danos, who have been for the most part the Aggressors, as well as the sufferers, can ever forgive them. Many judicious Persons do think, however, that the Save-de would find means to overcome these Difficulties, did not the Discontents he has raised at home make War dangerous to him; and the Interest of almost all the other Princes of Europe concur in the Preservation of the Done-i, under the Domination of their own King, by obstructing any further Accession of Power and Territories to the Swcdes. And this is certainly such a Bar as cannot be leaped over so that little of Alteration seems to be expected in Denmark from hence. Lastly, Those Jealousies which use to reign in the Families of Princes, -are not so common nor fatal in German) as elsewhere: The King of Denmark is a German Prince himself, and tis likely will find such Means of preferring his younger Sons, as may content them, either by breeding them up to the War (which is the most ordinary way) or by assigning them Apanages in convenient Places not liable to Dispute. Besides, it is with very moderate Revenues: So that the Corn-A monness of the Thing takes...
